

Celebrate the pawsitive effects of pet ownership.

And learn how you can manage vet expenses.

Owning a pet can bring so much joy.

Did you know there's research that suggests pet ownership is good for your physical and mental health? Here's some of what the research revealed:

- Pets help alleviate stress – In a recent study, 95% of pet parents reported they rely on their pet for stress relief, and 61% said their pet helped them feel less lonely.¹
- Pet owners may have better cardiovascular health – Having a pet appears to lower the risk of developing high blood pressure and may improve blood pressure control in people who already have the condition.² Plus, on average, people who own dogs walk 20 minutes more per day than those who don't.²
- Pets also offer positive benefits for children – Studies have shown that regular interactions with dogs can lead to lower stress in children, including neurodiverse children with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) and Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD).³
- Pets keep people connected – Many conversations can begin with a daily pet walk or a trip to the dog park. If you live alone, a pet may be helpful for companionship and expanding your social circle.²

Did you know?

Routine veterinary care for a dog averages over $423 per year, and one-time vet costs (spay/neuter and emergency care) average over $800.⁴

MetLife Pet Insurance can help you manage the routine—and not-so-routine—costs of vet care.
